His fighting style generally involves moves such as warheads, elbows and/or knee blows, as well as low blows and even tearing the limbs of his opponents, and he is willing to use them for fun and to win. He doesn't like to fight in a League fight. He defeated former WRB fighter Noisy Boy. He was only seen in the film during this fight, however, he would return to the games as both, a playable and combatable character. It appears in console games (XBOX 360 and PS3), and in the Real Steel: HD (IOS), WRB and Champions mobile franchises, and would also get two variants: Midas Gold and Centurion Midas. It is inspired by King Midas, who, in legend, had the ability to turn everything he touched into gold. It has been said that his head is a weakness, but in his fight with Noisy Boy he does not seem to have this trait. He's modeled after looking like a Spartan Warrior. STAGE 1: In Phase 1, Midas will look the same as the film. STAGE 3: At this stage, Midas will look brand new and have more armor on her body. The tattoo on his chest will disappear, but can be seen on his shoulder pads. STAGE 7: Once fully upgraded, his body will be covered in much more robust and bulky armor. His tattoos will be almost totally removed except for the main one, which can be seen in the middle of his chest and his shoulder pads. Its mohawk will be slightly lighter in color and will have a fin-looking piece Half. His fists will also be bigger and his boots turn mostly gray. There will also be LEDs on the outside on the outside thighs and the inner part of the shoulders. Curiosity As mentioned above, Midas is based on King Midas who, in legend, had the ability to turn everything he touched into gold. This explains midas' gold color. As stated in Midas' official video, he fights only in the Underworld and hates the League. That's perhaps because he can't make illegal moves in the league. He loves to get AKO when he fights. It's crash palace's best bot. His example, Artie Bakker, has a Midas shirt. It could be based on Rocky III's Clubber Lang. It's the tallest bot on the illegal circuit. It's even higher than zeus itself, making it one of the tallest bots in the entire movie. In Real Steel WRB, Midas has a gold version. Midas has two variants in the games: Midas Gold in WRB and Centurion Midas in IOS, which is based on her Stage 5 look from WRB. When Noisy Boy shot him down, his tomahawk turned around and came back up. His head is a bit durable as Noisy Shogun Trinity and Shockfists has done nothing but emit sparks. Midas' mohawk is made of fiber optics according to his card in the game Real Steel World Robot Boxing. Midas' mohawk is said to be made of a real tomahawk missile. Midas didn't beat Noisy Boy because he was better, but because Charlie hadn't learned all of Noisy's moves. But more likely because Noisy was defeated by an illegal move Add a photo to this gallery Community content is available in CC-BY-SA unless otherwise specified. Noticed.
